From the Principal's desk

What a privilege the Lord has given us to raise our children and form in them values and beliefs that will guide so many of their adult life decisions. But even though parents have far and away the most dominant formative influence in their children's development, THERE ARE MANY OTHER (AND SOMETIMES OPPOSING) FORMATIVE INFLUENCES IN OUR CHILDREN'S LIVES.

Parents have a powerful formative influence on their kids from birth to 4 years old. But once the children enter school, teachers also play a strong role in formation, up to the teenage years, after which peers have an ever-increasing influence.

There are also more subtle spheres of formative influence on a child's life which parents should be aware of. For example, social media, online gaming and the digital information highway are becoming massive, and potentially destructive formative influences on our children.

Don't get me wrong. None of these things are wrong, or evil, or harmful in themselves. In fact they are all common aspects of our modern existence that can be entertaining and informative. However, they become harmful when people partake in these things in a way that consumes massive extended stretches of time, crowding out every other interest, relationship or activity.

The exclusive demand that social media, online gaming or digital information exercises makes our children increasingly insular. Our society today is creating individuals who are highly individualistic, self-obsessed, control-oriented, nonconformist, and analytical. Some of these can be positive traits, but where will the foundation of values be that guides our children?

As parents and teachers who are invested in the positive formation of children, I BELIEVE WE NEED TO TAKE BACK SOME GROUND AND BRING BALANCE TO OUR CHILDREN'S LIVES.

Let us walk in the authority that God has given us in raising children with Godly values and wisdom.
