From the Principal's desk

When we are in the Foundation Phase at school, we are learning to read.

For the rest of our lives, we are reading to learn.

If we understand this irrefutable truth about education, we can make two conclusions about our children's chances of success in this world. One, that a good foundation in Grade 1 to 3 is critical. And two, that reading for meaning is an essential skill that cannot be overlooked.

According to the 2016 Progress in International Reading Literacy Study (PIRLS), eight out of 10 Grade 4 learners cannot read for meaning in South Africa. Some of them can read, but are unable to articulate the essence of what they have just read.

So what can we do about all of this as parents?

1. Ensure that your child is always reading something that is not school prescribed. Books are best, but even news, magazines and articles can help.
2. A question that parents should often be asking their children is "tell me about it". If you are asking in relation to what your child is reading, it will help them to synthesise an understanding of the content that they've read and express it to you. This is the 'meaning' part of reading with meaning.
3. Encourage your child to read widely across a range of topics and genres. This will build their vocabulary and general knowledge so that they can read other books with meaning.
4. Don't fall into the trap of thinking that it is only primary school children that need to be reading books that the school has not prescribed. Your high school child must be reading outside of the school context, regardless of how busy they are.

Besides mastering the critical skill of reading for meaning, our hope is always that children can get much joy and satisfaction from reading. It is a great gift.

Daddy DAUGHTER EVENING

On Saturday evening we hosted the Gr 4-7 Dads and Daughters evening. The evening was spent creating memories, dancing and laughing the night away.

Our dads learned more about their daughter's love languages and got creative painting and making memories. Thank you to everyone who joined in making the evening such a huge success.

Please Note: In case of absenteeism a doctor's note must be provided for all summative assessments (tests, orals, practical assessments etc) missed.
